Q: Qsort() not working on a struct array I've got a struct array of tags, and I want to sort them. The problem is that even though I use qsort() on it, my output is always [0, 1, 2, 3, 4]. #define TRUE 1 ... Qsort(my_sort_tags, my_sort_tags_size, sizeof(struct tag_item), cmp_tag_item); tag_item my_sort_tags[6]; my_sort_tags_size = 6; struct tag_item { char* tag; int score; }; struct tag_item cmp_tag_item(const void*p, const void*q) { const struct tag_item* a = (const struct tag_item*) p; const struct tag_item* b = (const struct tag_item*) q; return ((struct tag_item*)a->score - (struct tag_item*)b->score); } I don't understand why my cmp_tag_item() is not working. Can someone please explain? A: In a valid C program, you should typically do something like the following (and leave out the redundant casts) #define TRUE 1 ... Qsort(my_sort_tags, my_sort_tags_size, sizeof(struct tag_item), cmp_tag_item); tag_item my_sort_tags[6]; my_sort_tags_size = 6; struct tag_item my_sort_tags[6]; struct tag_item cmp_tag_item(const void*p, const void*q) { return ((struct tag_item*)p->score - (struct tag_item*)q->score); } Note that an input p may have data points zeroed in the struct tag_item. This is, in general, not a safe thing to do because there's no way to make sure that you know the layout of the structs. You'll need to either start with bigger sizes, or zero out the structs yourself. See this answer for more details. If you do care about

What's New in the?

This invention relates generally to radio receivers and more particularly to FM radio receivers having selectable operating modes. Many existing FM radio receivers are capable of receiving stereo programming. The programming is achieved by dividing the frequency range of the receiver into two bands, a lower band and an upper band. Programming is achieved by separating the signals on the lower band and the upper band and combining them to produce stereo reproduction. Some existing FM receivers may also be capable of receiving one-band programming which provides a monaural reproduction in the presence of strong signals, also known as overload protection. Typically, FM receivers are designed with the desire to operate in a first mode, known as stereo mode, or a second mode, known as mono mode. The operating mode selected by the operator is usually accomplished by a manual switch. If the operating mode is set to stereo mode, the signal is properly divided and the programming is achieved in a manner as described above. If the operating mode is set to mono mode, the signal is combined without any processing or the signal is fed to a speaker so that the receiver functions as a monaural radio. The use of a manual switch to select operating mode is not always satisfactory. In particular, many FM receivers are manufactured overseas and shipped to the United States. The manufacturing process for such FM receivers is often accomplished by hand. In particular, manually setting the operating mode of the FM receiver may not be possible. Thus, many receivers shipped to the United States are shipped with their operating mode set to the stereo mode even though the ultimate user desires to operate the receiver in the mono mode. Accordingly, there exists a need for an improved method and apparatus for selecting the operating mode of an FM radio receiver.The Democrats are still recovering from losing the House, and the world has changed. The economy is now severely depressed. The problems of the American people now include skyrocketing health care costs, joblessness, drug abuse, and house foreclosures. All that has passed and no longer exists. The things that exist now are the internet, social networking, blogs, and reality TV. New messaging is required. The Democrats need to get a message out that gets the jobs of the future and the war against terror out there once again. Why are not working? The concept of working is outdated. People are working because they have to pay the bills and get the gas. The majority of people are no longer tied to a traditional work position because of globalization, the outsourcing of jobs, and
